The Hamptons' best restaurants

LTI staff • Updated 25th July 2018

(CNN) — New York Hamptons' restaurant scene is continuing to thrive, attracting world class chefs, with wine lists to match.

Many of the best restaurants in this collection of villages and towns bordered by the Long Island Sound and the Atlantic Ocean are now open year-round -- not just for the frantic summer season.

Although there's more of a casual vibe here than New York City, it delivers when it comes to high end, quality cooking from many cultures and attracts a very chic city crowd.

Here are our favorite places to eat in the Hamptons.

Duryea's: One of the most popular spots in The Hamptons, this classic lobster shack serves a consistently fresh menu and has a low key atmosphere that only adds to its charm.

Duryea's

This classic lobster shack is one of the most popular spots in the Hamptons.

Family-run for around 80 years, it was bought by Marc Rowan in 2013 and fitted with a 1,200 square foot gourmet market.

Based in a casual, white shack with an outdoor terrace, Duryea's has a consistently fresh menu and its low key atmosphere only adds to its charm.

We recommend the signature lobster rolls, accompanied by the New England clam chowder.

The lobster rolls are chunky, meaty and generous, while the chowder rivals some of the best in Boston.

Note, this is a cash only restaurant, with a bring your own drink policy (but there are a small selection of non-alcoholic beverages.)

LTI advises bringing a good bottle of wine or some bubbly to toast a beautiful sunset out on the deck.
